NEW FEND IN RIVER TRAGEDY

Part of Torso Recovered at Fall River; Autopsy May Identify Slain Girl

Fall River, July 15.—Medical Examiner Thomas Gunning today performed an autopsy on the lower portion of a girl's torso which was found floating in the Taunton River off the foot of Davol street, and which is thought to be a portion of the body of the victim of the murder mystery which has baffled the authorities.

The autopsy will determine if the dead girl was subjected to illegal surgery prior to death and will also show, the police hope, something which may serve to identify the girl.

The new discovery in the most brutal murder in the annals of this section goes far, in the opinion of the authorities, to uphold the theory that the girl came to her death at the hands of some persons who were responsible for her condition, and that the body was cut up and thrown into the river to cover up evidence.

SEEKING A PHYSICIAN.
The police today started inquiry into the whereabouts of a certain doctor of Fall River whose disappearance from his office appears to have taken place at the time of the tragedy, as indicated by the blood-stained copy of The Independent found near the body on the shore of the Taunton river at Somerset.

This man is said to have been of Continued on Page 3, Column 4.

BULLETTINS!

London, July 15.—Another great German offensive is under way on the Western front, according to information received here this afternoon.

The Germans were reported to have crossed the Marne river at several points and to have broken through at some places in Champagne. In their last drive southward from the Aisne river heights the Germans got as far as the Marne, where they were held.

The drive in Champagne is the first big offensive operation in that zone for a long time.

Paris, July 15.—The Germans early today launched another big effort on the western front. A heavy drive over a wide front was reported by the French War Office. The heaviest attacks were at Chateau Thierry and at Vaux.

With the American Army at the Marne, July 15 (11 a. m.).—The Germans launched a new offensive at 6 o'clock this morning, during which they succeeded in crossing the Marne, establishing bridgeheads on the southern bank.

The emplacement of fifty pontoons enabled the Germans to receive over-coming reinforcements, but the Americans counter-attacked, liberating their comrades who had previously been captured, and taking a few German captives. The counter-charge gave time for a withdrawal of the artillery.

The Germans then assaulted again, advancing farther, while the Americans organized another counter-attack.

The German attack at Vaux (held by the Americans west of Chateau Thierry), which was delivered early in the morning, was a feint. The Germans succeeded in getting a temporary footing in the village, but the Americans immediately delivered a counter-charge and drove them out. The Americans then established new lines a quarter of a mile in advance.

ALLIES SMASH BIG DRIVE, INFLECTING HEAVY LOSSES

By ERNEST P. ORR.
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

Paris, July 15.—The new German offensive today did not take the allies by surprise. This time the attack was expected.

The Germans were held between Rheims and the Argonne forest, where they were able to make only slight and insignificant progress at the cost of terrible sacrifices.

Simultaneously with the opening of the offensive, German infantry on the left wing entered the action early in the morning, attacking after a brief, but violent, bombardment with gas shells.

The right wing had not yet entered the action towards Chateau Thierry when this was written.

The fifth great German offensive of the year was launched upon a fifty-mile front from Chateau Thierry, on the Marne River, to Main de Massiges, in the Champagne district.

Americans were caught in the sweep of the new German drive.

Violent fighting is still raging, but the French and Americans are sustaining their positions with great gallantry, the War Office announced at noon.

The front along which the tide of battle is swirling stretches from the sector of Chateau Thierry eastward to Dormans on the Marne, thence in a wide semi-circle north of Rheims into the Champagne district.

Americans brigaded with the French are holding part of the battle line around Chateau Thierry and eastward on the southern bank of the Marne.

The text of the War Office communique follows: "Following violent artillery preparation, the enemy attacked this morning on a front from the sector of Chateau Thierry as far as Main de Massiges (in Champagne).

"Our troops energetically met the shock of the enemy onslaught on a front of eighty kilometres (about fifty miles). "The battle continues."

Yankees Bear Brunt of Terrific Fighting

By FRANK CHARLTON.
International News Service Cable Editor.

The Germans are striking again for Paris. Following a cannonade so terrific that the thunder of the guns could be heard for many miles, the Germans today launched a series of assaults over a fifty-mile front, from the sector of Chateau Thierry, on the Marne River, to the mid-Champagne region. This was the fifth separate offensive the Germans have launched on the western front this year, and the early reports from the battle emphasized the fury of the struggle.

Americans, holding part of the Marne line to the east and west of Chateau Thierry, are bearing their brunt of the fighting.

This was the first time that the Americans had been called upon in force to help withstand a great German blow. Fighting with all their traditional gallantry, the French met shock for shock and were sustaining their main positions when the French War Office reported upon the engagement at noon today. Rheims, which stands at the apex of the French salient on the eastern flank of the Marne front, is the centre of the fighting. The Germans are struggling hard to overwhelm the French defenders of Rheims and thus straighten their lines by overrunning the city.

This last German blow fell at the point where the Teuton lines extend nearest to Paris. (Chateau Thierry is only forty-eight miles from Paris.)

The local objectives of the German army command—not taking into consideration their evident hope of advancing toward Paris—were evidently the following:

- 1—Capture Rheims and compel a retirement of the French line in the western part of the Champagne region and between Rheims and the Marne.
 - 2—Cross the Marne and seize the important Chateau-Thierry railway.
 - 3—Drive against the next lateral railway line of communication running eastward from Paris through Vitry.
- It is the first German drive toward the Marne this year (of which the present offensive may be considered the twin) begun on May 27 and fighting lasted nearly a fortnight. The Germans drove southward and as far as the Marne and a few detachments got to the southern bank, but they were quickly annihilated.
- The in the Germans settled down to a long period of preparation, during which the allies' military experts were kept guessing as to where the next big German drive might come. It was generally believed that it would be delivered in the north against Amiens and the channel ports.
- The Germans took up their positions along ten miles of heights

On the northern bank of the Marne, between Chateau Thierry and Dormans. The southern bank was held by French and Americans. During the period of comparative quiet on the Aisne-Marne front the Germans inaugurated an offensive southeast of Montdidier and followed this up by an unsuccessful effort to take Rheims by storm. Neither of these short-lived enterprises succeeded.

The Germans are evidently employing mighty forces in the present operation and the magnitude of the preliminary bombardment made it plain that a great mass of artillery had been concentrated to open up the way for the infantry assaults.

The Germans are evidently striking in three directions: In the Chateau Thierry zone they are attacking towards the west; on the Marne and in Champagne they are attempting to press due south, while southwest of Rheims the nature of the battlefield compels them to concentrate their pressure in a southeasterly direction. The 1918 western front offensive fell on the following dates: March 21—Picardy. April 9—Flanders. May 27—Aisne-Marne front. July 15—Marne-Champagne front.

Washington Is Elated at Americans' Showing

High army officers made this very plain this afternoon in discussing the scanty information as far obtainable regarding the attack and the flow of the tide of battle in Germany's first great attempt to break through the allied lines and capture Paris.

There are very few official reports available as yet regarding the fighting. The army was today more or less dependent on the reports of the press associations. But these reports, taken in connection with the known facts, resulted in no feeling of gloom.

American soldiers are admittedly a very important factor in today's operations, but they are in better shape to withstand the enemy assaults than they were four weeks ago. Their losses are much heavier, and they have more artillery ready for their support, officials say.

OTHER ONSETS BEYOND IN NORTH.

There was a general belief today that the present assault will be followed by still heavier German operations in the north, where it is believed the Germans are again ready to try to break their way through to the Channel ports. In that sector there were very strong American units supporting the Anglo-French line.

Directly in the path of today's advance is supposed to be Major-General Omar Bundy's second division, made up of regular army forces and the Marines. The other American units undoubtedly are having a part in the battle, but it is expected here to develop into a long and bitter struggle to keep the French and British from being driven toward Paris and to cut the lines of communication with the British and Belgian forces in the north.

TOO EARLY TO PREDICT.

Officials said it was far too early to forecast the outcome. They are hopeful that the line will hold with only slight concessions, but it is pointed out here that it is a matter for General Pershing to determine. He has sufficient forces available to maintain present positions if he believes it the best policy to pay the price. If he does not, then, officials here who are familiar with the exact situation say, he can be depended on to withdraw his men slowly and in good order, meanwhile inflicting tremendous losses upon the enemy.

Army officers declared the early reports were very reassuring. The French War Office statement that the French are sustaining their positions with great military resources that they have not been ordered to retreat was a great relief.

It will be an surprise to officers here to learn that among the other objects of the new German advance is the small town of Rheims. It is assumed here that practically the three first Army Corps, which are under the command of Major-General Joseph E. Sturgis, will be brought into action in the present operations.

Paris, July 15.—The fifth great German offensive of the year was launched today upon a fifty-mile front from Chateau Thierry on the Marne river to Meuse, between the Champagne district.

American soldiers were caught in the sweep of the new German drive. Violent fighting is still raging, but the French and Americans are sustaining their positions with great gallantry, the War Office announced at noon.

The German attacks were preceded by cannonading of terrific violence.

The front along which the tide of battle is swirling stretches from the sector of Chateau Thierry eastward to Dormans on the Marne, thence in a westerly direction north of Rheims into the Champagne district.

American brigades with the French are holding out in the Champagne district on the southern bank of the Marne.

However, an estimate may be made. According to announcement at Washington, the Germans are approximately 350,000 Americans holding ten front line positions extending a total of four miles. This is about one-tenth of the entire western battle front of 425 miles.

A quarter of a million Americans on a total of forty-one miles means an average of about 4,000 in the mile. This means there would be 60,000 American troops along the eighty-mile position west from Vaux and the twenty-mile position east from Chateau Thierry.

None of the ten positions held by Americans are known. The first "wherever in the Vosges sector," that yet to be announced.

THE AMERICAN SECTORS.

The ten positions occupied by Americans and the length of front held at each position are as follows:

- 1—Near Hamel, in front of Amiens one mile stretch. Americans brigaded with Australians, captured Hamel Village and Hamel and Vaux Woods on July 4.
- 2—Cantigny, Somme sector, near Montdidier, three-mile stretch, where Americans on May 28 made the first attack delivered by our troops alone in France.
- 3—Vaux, eight-mile stretch.
- 4—Chateau Thierry, two-mile stretch.
- 5—St. Mihiel salient, two-mile stretch between Bourville and Mazy on west flank of salient.
- 6—St. Mihiel salient, southern end, eight-mile stretch between Apremont and Pont-a-Mousson in the Vosges.
- 7—Lorraine, a three-mile stretch near Bavierville.

Two of the ten positions held by American troops in France are in the sweep of the new German offensive on the Marne and Champagne fronts.

The two positions are those of Vaux and Chateau Thierry, both at the western end of the fifty-mile stretch of the enemy's latest drive.

At Vaux, which is only two miles west of Chateau Thierry, American troops hold an eight-mile stretch from Vaux up to Buzereux. At Chateau Thierry the Americans hold a two-mile stretch of the front. The town is located on both banks of the Marne River. The Germans were last reported in possession of the larger part of the town, which is on the north side of the river, while our troops occupy the smaller part on the southern bank. The American line runs thence eastward along the river.

It is impossible to state, of course, the exact number of American troops engaged today by the French. The figures are approximately 350,000 Americans holding ten front line positions extending a total of four miles. This is about one-tenth of the entire western battle front of 425 miles.

Franco-Italian Armies Hurt Back Austrians Along a Wide Frontage

London, July 15.—Franco-Italian troops, apparently are applying a "pincer" movement against the Austro-Hungarian in Albania.

With the Italian exerting terrific pressure against the enemy left flank, on the Adriatic coast, the French, on the right wing, have made appreciable progress in a northwestern drive. Capture of Jini and the village of Narta, at the confluence of the Tomorica and Devoli Rivers, was announced by the Paris War Office. On the right bank of the Devoli the French carried the village of Gramsh.

The Italian advance on the coastal flank keeps pace with that of the French, the Allies stand a good chance of turning the Austrian line north of the Semeri River, where a stand against the attackers is being made.

Evidently the French have succeeded in clearing the Tomorica Valley entirely of the foe, and the French of the vital heights at the junction of the Tomorica and the Devoli the French are in a position to strike a still heavier blow.

Because of the almost readiness and rugged character of the land over which the Allies are advancing, their progress from now on must necessarily be much slower than last week, when the gain was almost five miles a day.

Engineers are hard put by the problem of transporting artillery and supplies to the new battle line, and it may be several weeks before the Allies push will reach the momentum of last week.

It is doubtful if the Austrians will be able to make a successful stand at the Semeri plain, because the Allied advances on both flanks already have won the new position.

The loss of Berat, their great base in the Albanian theatre, was a serious blow to the Austrians.

Now the Allies are threatening the most important city of Albania, which is a little more than fifteen miles from Berat, but they are far from certain of success.

The Allied objective in the second phase of the drive now under way, seems to be the highway from Berat, through Elbasan, to Monastir. This road would greatly aid the Allies in the transportation of supplies to the Saloniki sector, and would give them another port, Durazzo, on the Albanian shore.

At present the Allied forces in the Saloniki district are supplied chiefly over the fine military road from Avlona, a fine harbor just about seventy miles from the Italian coast.

labor leaders today, and it is expected that before night all the 15,000 workers in the plant will have joined the movement to obtain wages and working conditions equal to those paid at other plants of the company in

"The men and women of the General Electric plants are striking for the right to organize. When their demands are formulated they will be presented to the company," said Charles D. Keavney, organizer for the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

"No demands have been made and no demands can be properly made except in individual instances, in view of the liberality of the company. Presumably there have been many misstatements and exaggerations which have led to the situation we now have. We regard the situation as a test of loyalty," was the announcement of Walter C. Each worker carried a small American flag and sang "Where Do We Go From Here?" to the accompaniment of the two bands.

The mass meeting was addressed by

William A. Nealey, secretary of the Lynn Chamber of Labor and business manager of the Lynn Central Labor Union; R. J. Barr, local organizer of the International Association of Machinists, and Mr. Keavney.

TICKETS ARE ASSIGNED.

After brief addresses workers in various departments were sent to Odd Fellows' Hall, Casino Hall and the two halls to the Eastern Building.

The general strike committee met at headquarters, No. 35 Munroe street, at 2 o'clock, when pickets were assigned to the West Lynn plant and river works.

Mr. Nealey is optimistic over the result of the efforts to organize the big victory and said:

Telegrams have been received from John Colpoys, government conciliator for the Department of Labor, notifying the company and the strikers that he is on his way to Lynn from Washington; from William H. Johnson, international president of the machinists' Union and a member of

By NICK FLATLEY.
Battering Babe Ruth, who disappointed one of the biggest crowds of the year Saturday with an unexpected swarming vacation, was due to come back to form today, according to the oft-quoted law of averages. One day off a week without a few homers, and triple, is the big boy's absolute limit, and, accordingly, the White Sox seemed in for a lot of bother on their farewell appearance of the present series.

After the Alhambra Sox come the St. Louis Browns, dubbed by astute C. Mack as one of the best teams in baseball today. That may be, though they haven't proved it to date.

HAVE A NEW PILOT.
They are interesting, however, from a local angle, inasmuch as George Stiller, who is giving the rejuvenated Braves Colby batting for several sorts of leadership, will be among those present. Also Boston will have the first chance to watch Jimmy Thrane in the role of manager. When the Waterbury were here previously, Fielder Jones, retired, was at the helm.

Getting back to this afternoon's pitching proposition, and Carl Darnall, who is giving the rejuvenated Braves Colby batting for several sorts of leadership, will be among those present. Also Boston will have the first chance to watch Jimmy Thrane in the role of manager. When the Waterbury were here previously, Fielder Jones, retired, was at the helm.

ALAN WELLS IN CAMP.
The Red Sox have failed to develop any of the weaknesses predicted for them earlier in the year, and, right now, look like the best pennant prospect in the circuit.
The ability of Sam Jones to fill the hole in the pitching staff, in great part responsible, and it appears from our seat as though Barrow could drive ahead of the Yanks on his pitching strength alone.

Cleveland was apparently put on the chase right here in our city last week. The season is young yet, as the manager has had scarce plenty of time for surprise, but things have gone smooth for him, and he seems to state that the local heroes have the goods, which further eases the draft, with further havoc with the baseball machine.

SUNDAY CONTESTS FOR

BRAVES IN MONTREAL
The exhibition game arranged for a break from next Sunday's Montreal between the Braves and Chicago Cubs is to be the first of a series of Sunday contests between Manager Stiller and the Canadian city, he announces.

The arrangement provides for the appearance of the Braves and a suitable opponent on each Sunday afternoon on a flat guarantee of $10,000-$15,000 for each club. The Braves and Giants have signed for Sunday, August 11.
